Investing in Our Children: Emerging Reform Efforts in Juvenile Justice

April 25-29, 2008, in Washington, D.C., the Coalition for Juvenile Justice (CJJ) will host a conference designed to showcase juvenile justice and delinquency prevention reform efforts at the local, state and national levels which effectively demonstrate that investing in prevention, early intervention and a full continuum of community-based services yields positive results for children, families and communities.

The conference is designed to:

- Highlight the work of the State Advisory Groups (SAGs) in leading and/or sustaining juvenile justice reform efforts;
- Increase understanding of what it takes to initiate, lead and sustain reform efforts at all levels of government and through public/private partnerships;
- Demonstrate the cost effectiveness of investments in family and community-based services to reduce over-reliance on incarceration and/or reduce/eliminate racial/ethnic disparities and DMC in the juvenile justice system;
- Explore ways to deepen reform efforts within jurisdictions by re-deploying resources and/or creatively engaging multiple funding sources.

About the Coalition for Juvenile Justice (CJJ)

In 1984, citizen volunteers appointed by Governors and charged to fulfill the purposes and spirit of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act formed a representative national nonprofit organization, the Coalition for Juvenile Justice (CJJ):

- To give voice to state-identified concerns and needs in juvenile justice;
- To advise state and federal policy makers and the federal Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention; and
- To generate ongoing collegial support and information exchange.

For nearly 25 years, CJJ has served as the national association of Governor-appointed State Advisory Groups and included members from many walks of life and professional disciplines who, together with allied individuals and organizations, seek to improve the circumstances of vulnerable and troubled children, youth and families involved with the courts, and to build safe communities. Today, CJJ members span the U.S. states and territories, providing a forum for sharing best practices, innovations, policy recommendations and peer support. Visit us on the Web: www.juvjustice.org
