Introduction

In-District and Remote Advocacy are Critical for Reform

Building and maintaining strong relationships with Members of Congress is essential to achieving your advocacy goals. For this reason, engaging with Senators, Representatives, and their staff, should be a top priority for juvenile justice advocates. Many advocates, however, worry that their inability to travel to Washington, D.C. frequently, if at all, minimizes their impact on federal advocacy.

Don’t let this stop you. Advocacy goes beyond face-to-face meetings in DC. Federal advocacy starts at home, where Senators and Representatives are elected by their constituents. They represent you, and your voice is what is most important to them. Engaging with members of Congress both in-district and remotely is not only more feasible logistically for most advocates, but also provides valuable opportunities to build meaningful relationships with members and their staff.

There are still ways to make your voice heard, even if you’re not in D.C. Luckily, we live in an age where many things can be done remotely. Just because you cannot meet with people in person does not mean that meetings cannot happen. This toolkit includes tips and ideas for advocating digitally and communicating with Congress from home.

Where to Begin?

This toolkit will be your guide. It will begin with the different ways you can engage with your Senator or Representative both in-district and remotely, followed by a step-by-step guide for how to meet with a member of Congress, attend a town hall, plan a site visit, use social media and technology to advocate, and write an editorial or letter to the editor. This toolkit includes a mix of pointers for advocacy, both during social distancing and after restrictions are lifted. You will also find Coalition for Juvenile Justice (CJJ) advocacy priorities and briefing sheets to be used as leave-behinds for your member. We hope this toolkit provides a foundation for in-district and remote federal advocacy and serves as a building block for strong and meaningful relationships with your members of Congress.
All around the country, states are transforming their juvenile justice systems. With the help of private initiatives, like the Annie E. Casey Foundation’s Juvenile Detention Alternative Initiative (JDAI), the Pew Charitable Trusts, and others, jurisdictions are using new approaches to create safer and more effective systems for youth, families, and communities. While private dollars have fueled much of this reform, this money has, in some instances, been shifted to new programs. Federal funding now plays an even more critical role in delinquency prevention and intervention. The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA), recently reauthorized by Congress, not only protects youth in custody by prescribing core protections, but also supports programs that reduce reliance on detention and incarceration, are cost effective, and result in better outcomes for youth, families, and communities. Over the past eighteen years, federal dollars have been cut drastically, down almost 50% since 2002.¹ Given this fiscal and political climate, relationships with members of Congress are more important than ever. Let’s continue strengthening ours!
How to Engage Remotely and In-District

Opportunities to Interact with Members of Congress

District work periods and Friday-Monday are often the perfect time to interact with your member of Congress and show your support for federal programs that fund juvenile justice programs and services. Whether you are a service provider, practitioner, police officer, clergy member, youth, student, family member, or community member, you are a constituent, and you have an important voice.

There are many ways that you can engage with your members of Congress when they are in-district and remotely while they are in DC. Here are some examples:

- Schedule a meeting at the District Office;
- Schedule a call or video-chat meeting with a staffer;
- Attend a virtual Town Hall meeting;
- Invite your member for a site or program visit; or
- Write an editorial or letter to the editor.

2023 Dates to Remember

Please keep the list of currently scheduled in-district work periods in mind as you plan your advocacy. Check Congress’ website to learn more about when you can engage remotely while they are in D.C.

Advocacy in an Era of Digital Communication

Communicating With Your Member

Luckily, we live in an age where many things can be done remotely, including advocacy. Just because you cannot meet with people in person does not mean that meetings cannot happen. Staffers and members of Congress are still working and communicating with constituents.

Phone meetings, virtual town halls, video meetings, social media, and even writing a letter can still allow you to connect with your representatives. Staffers may still be able to meet by phone or through a video platform, such as Skype or Zoom. Send an email requesting a virtual meeting, and prepare as if you were meeting face-to-face.

Personalize your online interactions with representatives. Recording a video or posting pictures can help humanize issues that you are advocating for and show your members exactly who is affected by legislation and why it matters to you.

Organizations such as CJJ and Act4JJ also offer opportunities to support change via social media. You can join in Act4JJ's #TwitterThursdays and tag a representative who you want to know about youth justice reform. CJJ also sends Calls to Action to our members to contact their legislators.

To join CJJ or to get more information, please email info@juvjustice.org.

Advocacy Tip #2

Using social media as a tool can be extremely effective if done correctly. Here are some tips to help your engagements make an impact:

- Directly tag your representative on any social media platform. Some representatives will have both personal accounts and accounts managed by their communications team. Think about who you want to reach and tag accordingly.
- Take note about their social media presence. Do they use a hashtag frequently? Do they retweet informative graphics? See if you can notice a pattern, and tailor your posts.
- Use your location. Representatives are more likely to engage with people in their district.
- Ask questions. This starts a conversation and warrants an individualized response.
- Be polite. Being kind and courteous over social media is just as crucial as it is in-person.

Personal Visits With Your Member in the District

Members of Congress typically travel frequently between Washington, D.C. and their districts. Scheduling a meeting with them or one of their aides at the district office can be a great way to make a connection with your member.

Coordinating a meeting for a group of juvenile justice advocates is also an effective advocacy tool—the more constituents are concerned about an issue, the more likely the member is to pay attention. Such meetings can take place via video or conference call as well. See how to get started below.

Make an Appointment

Contact the appointment scheduler in your district by phone or email. If you do not know your Senators or Representatives, you can use the zip-code finder here: http://www.govtrack.us/congress/members. This site will provide you with a direct link to your Member's webpage, where you can find contact information for the district office. When you email the district office, your request should be to the attention of the scheduler.

In your email to the scheduler, you should include what you would like to speak to the member about and identify yourself as a constituent and State Advisory Group (SAG) member, if applicable. You should also include specific dates and times that you are available to meet. Please see the sample meeting request letter included at the end of this toolkit for your use.

If the member is unavailable, ask to meet with the District Office Director or Legislative Director. If you do not hear back from the scheduler, be sure to call the office to follow up.

Be Prepared and Responsive

Before your appointment, identify who in your group will talk about each specific issue. Familiarize yourself with the key points and make sure you have a succinct request for your member.

During the meeting, be prepared to answer questions from the member. Be sure to stay on point and not go on tangents. If applicable, offer your and/or your group's assistance to the member. If you can get the member to commit to doing something, such as making a floor statement, circulating a “dear colleague letter,” or speaking at an event, that's a bonus.

Following-Up

After the meeting, be sure to send a thank you letter or email to the member. The thank you letter should restate the points you went over in the meeting and should provide any additional information that was requested or that you promised during the meeting.

If the member made a commitment when you met, be sure to remind them of their promise in your thank you letter. You should also send a copy of the letter to CJJ so we can stay informed of your contact with members for our own advocacy efforts in D.C.

Advocacy Tip #3

Be patient. Closely related to Advocacy Tip #1, being polite, is being patient. Members of Congress are extremely busy people and have full schedules every day. Do not be surprised if a Member is late to a meeting or event, and be flexible with the time that the member has to spend with you.
Town Hall Meetings

Start a Conversation

Town Hall meetings provide a unique opportunity to interact with your member of Congress. Not only do you get the opportunity to ask a question about juvenile justice issues, but you get to ask it in public, on the record. Town Hall meetings allow advocates to raise the awareness of members of Congress and other community stakeholders simultaneously — both critical partners on the path to reform.

Town Hall meetings also provide a platform for young people, family members, and others affected by the juvenile justice system to share their story. Encourage individuals you work with, who are well prepared and comfortable telling their stories, to attend these meetings and share their experience with the juvenile and criminal justice systems. Personal stories can send powerful messages to members of Congress. Organize a group of advocates to attend a Town Hall meeting. Show your member that there are many people that support your message. There is power in numbers. Coordinate ahead of time about the questions you want to ask and who will ask them. To find out where and when Town Hall meetings are being held, check your member’s website and/or social media accounts. You can also call the district office or check local news outlets. Many organizations also hold virtual town halls that you will want to learn about and attend. This allows access to national or local events from wherever you may be in the country.

Sample Question to Ask

- Federal funding for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention and intervention programs has been drastically cut over the past ten years. [Give a specific example of how this impacts your state on the ground.] How do you plan on safeguarding such important funding for our state?
Site and Program Visits

Show Your Member What You're Talking About

Everyone knows the saying, “a picture is worth a thousand words,” and that saying holds true in advocacy as well. Having members see a detention facility or visit a community-based program first hand speaks volumes. A site or program visit allows members to physically see federal dollars at work.

There is, of course, a strategy behind site visits. While taking a member to a new, cutting edge facility for a site visit is certainly worthwhile, you may consider designating a portion of the visit to an in-depth explanation of the old center and why the changes were made. Or, you may take your member to two facilities—one exemplary and one in need of change. You want to be sure that you paint an accurate picture of what youth around the country experience daily.

Inviting members of Congress to community-based programs is another terrific advocacy tool. Members get to interact with young people and gain a deeper understanding of the types of programs supported with federal dollars—and those that could disappear if funding continues to decline.

While in-person visits to sites may be limited or not possible at the moment, consider remote alternatives. Is there a video of the program that you can share? Is there remote-based programming you can highlight? Think strategically about what can be done safely now and what to keep in your toolbox for later dates.

Scheduling a Visit

Scheduling a site or program visit is similar to scheduling a meeting, yet with more details and logistics. You will still likely deal directly with the district scheduler and will want to send him or her an email with an agenda for the visit, a list of who else will be attending, and dates and times for the visit. They may ask you for additional information. Always be flexible and responsive.

It is important when scheduling site or program visits that you go through all the internal channels that may exist before inviting the member to attend. For example, are there security clearances needed? Do you have to have permission from the facility director? Are there confidentiality or safety issues to consider? Are in-person site visits permitted during this time? These questions should be brainstormed and answered before reaching out to the member’s office.

Advocacy Tip #5

Become a resource. Members of Congress and their staff rely on constituents to feed them information about what is happening on the ground. They see constituents as experts on specific issues and will want you to provide them with the details needed to help them make a case. By offering your assistance and being reliable, you develop a strong relationship with your member and his or her office. For example, if a bill is introduced in Congress that may impact young people in the juvenile justice system, you want to be the person your member contacts to ask whether or not he or she should support the legislation and why.
Op-eds and Letters to the Editor

Advocacy Tip #6
Be specific. Federal advocacy is all about specifics. Members of Congress primarily focus on the issues that are close to home. When you interact with your member, you should talk about why the issue is important to you. No matter who you are—a practitioner, a young person, a judge, a family member, a parole officer—you have a story. You have a reason why juvenile justice is important to you, and you should share that story with your member of Congress. You must also link your story to a specific policy issue—why federal funding is important—and make the issue relevant to your member by linking it to specific outcomes in your state. Without specifics, your issue sinks to the bottom rather than rising to the top. Including facts and figures to support your ask or policy position is extremely helpful when speaking with Members and their staff. Anecdotes about programs that are effective are also helpful for your advocacy.

Speak Your Mind
Op-eds and letters to the editor are great advocacy tools that can help bolster awareness about juvenile justice issues and that can be used at any time. Both op-eds and letters to the editor allow advocates to choose and frame their issue.

When pitching an op-ed to a newspaper or other media outlet, you should ask for the editorial page editor. Introduce yourself and tell them you are interested in submitting an op-ed for placement during a specific district work period or other target date. It is helpful when writing an op-ed or letter to the editor if you can link your editorial or letter to another newsworthy item—whether that is a previously published story or an event or holiday.

There are a couple of timely hooks that you can use to increase the likelihood of having your op-ed or letter to the editor published: (1) as Congress determines their Fiscal Year 2024 appropriation levels, we should focus on investing in what works and (2) as we find a new post-pandemic normal, it is essential that we not overlook our children and their safety.

Use this opportunity to spread the word about taking care of youth and finding community-based supports that keep young people and their families safe.

Pitching Your Work
The devil is in the details. Be sure to follow submission guidelines for both op-eds and letters to the editor. If you follow their guidelines, you automatically increase the likelihood that your piece will be published. When you send in your submission, include a cover note that reminds the editor who you are and reference any prior contact you may have had. Include your contact information in the note. If you do not hear back from the publication within a week, follow up with a phone call. Make sure you are responsive to any follow up questions from the editor and offer to modify your piece if needed.
CJJ Advocacy Priorities

Priority 1: Fully Fund the JJDPA & Secure Federal Funding for other Juvenile Justice Programs and Services

The federal government plays an essential role in preventing juvenile delinquency and improving the effectiveness of juvenile justice systems at the state, local, and tribal levels nationwide. When coupled with state, local, and private dollars, federal investments seed and support the development, implementation, and sustainability of optimal juvenile justice and delinquency prevention systems and practices in all 56 U.S. states, territories, and the District of Columbia, as well as in local jurisdictions. There are three main federal funding sources for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention:

Title II State Formula Grants

These grants support state efforts to comply with federal standards for the care of youth in the justice system and have been cut by more than 20% since 2002.

Title V Local Delinquency Prevention Program

This is the only federal program designed to prevent delinquency at the local level in coordination with a statewide prevention plan and has been slashed by nearly 50%. Of the Title V funds appropriated over the last nine years, between 53 and 100 percent have been set aside for non-JJDPA programs.

The Juvenile Accountability Block Grant.

This block grant provides local judges, law enforcement officers, corrections officials and providers with a range of options to address the needs and behaviors of court-involved youth. It has been significantly reduced, and in recent years has been completely zeroed out.

Since 2002, federal investments in programs that prevent and reduce delinquency have been slashed nearly in half. During that same time, federal spending on police, prosecution and incarceration has increased by more than 60%.

On average, it costs $407.58 a day - around $148,767 a year - to incarcerate a young person. The return on this investment is an average recidivism rate of 55%. Conversely, community-based alternatives to incarceration for court-involved youth cost as little as $75 a day and reduce recidivism by an average of 22% when compared to incarceration.

Appropriations for Fiscal Year 2024

Before October 1st, Congress must approve federal spending for discretionary programs, including juvenile justice funding for state programs. For FY 2024, we are asking for full funding of the JJDPA as authorized by Congress in 2018. We request $176 million dollars for Titles II & V of the Act, including:

- $80 million for Title II to help states comply with the JJDPA and promote delinquency prevention.
- $96,053,401 for Title V, with 11% going to support the Tribal Youth Program and the remainder to support PROMISE grants.
- $30 million to fund the Juvenile Accountability Block Grant Reauthorization and Bullying Prevention and Intervention Act of 2019 (H.R. 494).
- $50 million for a demonstration project to close and repurpose youth prisons.
Resources to Share

It is helpful when meeting with Congress to have materials you can share to help educate them about your issue area. To that end, CJJ and our partners within the Act 4 Juvenile Justice Coalition have created the following fact sheets and briefing materials that you can print and bring to your meetings, or email to your member and their staff either in advance, or as a follow up measure. Please click here to download and share some of the following resources:

- 2024 Appropriations: This sheet gives an overview of CJJ’s request to appropriators for Fiscal Year 2024.

- Juvenile Justice: This one-pager summarizes our key federal asks for 2023.

- Investing in What Works: This sheet outlines what the JJDPA is and what the benefits are of full implementation.

- The Valid Court Order Exception: As initially enacted, the JJDPA included a blanket prohibition on incarcerating youth for status offense behaviors. An amendment added in the 1980s created what is now known as the valid court order (VCO) exception, a provision that enables states to incarcerate youth who are found in violation of a valid court order. This sheet explains the VCO exception and the importance of phasing it out.

- Historical Funding Chart: This resource looks at federal juvenile justice appropriations and how they have changed in recent years.

- Recommendation to the 118th Congress: This resource details the Coalition for Juvenile Justice’s recommendations to the 118th Congress. These include restoring appropriations for juvenile justice programs as well as ensuring appropriate implementation and oversight of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, and eliminating the Valid Court Order (VCO) exception.

- JJDPA Brochure: This brochure provides an overview of JJDPA and its benefits.

[District Office Address]

VIA EMAIL: [email]

Dear [Senator or Representative]:

The purpose of this letter is to request an appointment for representatives of the [SAG or agency home] to meet with you in your district office on [date]. If it will not be possible to meet in person, we would like to schedule a meeting via phone or video chat. If you are unavailable, we would like to meet with a key member of your staff who handles juvenile justice/children’s services and appropriations issues.

As I believe you know, the [SAG or agency home] is a State agency with the primary mission of improving outcomes for children and families. We have previously provided you some of the publications we prepare that should be beneficial in addressing children's issues and identifying their impact on [your State], and as we usually do, we will share any new ones on this visit. Additionally, the [SAG or agency home] is responsible for implementation of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA) in [your State], which was passed in 2018.

[If you are a CJJ member-at-large please provide a short two to three sentence explanation of your interest in juvenile justice in lieu of the above paragraph.]

We would appreciate the opportunity to meet with you or a key member of your staff to discuss the implementation of the JJDPA, appropriations for federal juvenile justice programs, and the impact the Act has had and continues to have in [your State]. [Name of contact] will call your office to follow up on scheduling an appointment. We look forward to seeing you on [Date]. If we can provide you with additional information or assistance, please contact me at [email and phone number].

Sincerely,

VIA EMAIL: [email]

Dear [Senator or Representative]:

We appreciate [you or name of staff] meeting with representatives of [SAG or other entity] on [date] to talk about federal juvenile justice funding and the implementation of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA). We were glad to have the opportunity to provide you with information about the positive impact these funds have had in [your state].

As we discussed during our conversation with [you or name of staff], we are particularly concerned about [enter information about federal funding for your state].

We hope the final budget will include strong allocations for juvenile justice and urge your support for these funds that make so much difference to communities across [your state] and the nation.

If we can provide you with additional information or assistance, please let us know. [State] critically needs federal juvenile justice funding.

Sincerely,
